After creating an account, the player is ready to start the tutorial which is a great help to learn the basics.

The first base is located in an astro somewhere on a galaxy in the Universe. After the construction of basic buildings we get to discover new technologies and are able to produce logistics and fighting units.

As the base gets more developed we can scout the nearby astros, using the interactive map and a scout unit to gathering info on players that may help or attack us later on.

Once the first base is well developed its time to search for an astro and send an Outpost Ship to setup a second base. Having several bases improves the economy so we can invest in advanced structures and advanced spaceships.

Economy can come in multiple ways, like bases structures, trades between bases, pillaging bases, collecting debris, etc... The bigger the economy the more we can build and produce. But having the economy advantage is not enough when we are vulnerable to attacks, so fortifying bases it's a priority and having some fleets to help defending.

One of the greatest moments is participating in galaxy wars where thousands of players unleash millions of spaceships from simple fighters to heavy-classes like battleships. The winners get to collect millions of debris and form a stronghold that could last for months or only for some hours.

With the new version 2, the game interface got easier and beautiful. New game features like the Fleet Maintenance and Starting Boost improved the gameplay.

Astro Empires offers a long and rewarding experience. Having no endgame, players can play for years and still making new friends or enemies and even discover new technologies like a Death Star.

For people who love scifi and strategy games, this could be the perfect game to play, but bear in mind that this is a very competitive game. For the brave ones who accept the challenge be sure to follow the tutorial, join a guild and learn from the help pages available ingame.

Released in May 2006 by Nuno Rosario from Portugal, Astro Empires was a one man effort that took two years to develop, inspired by the movie Star Wars and strategic space game Masters of Orion, among others.

Today the founder leads a team of developers that actively releases new features and adapting the game to today's platforms like mobile and tablets.

Stats

Currently about 40,000 active players defend over 300,000 bases on a Universe with millions of colonizable astros.

The game is available in 14 languages.
